patriotism to his homeland by declaring that his sacrifice will be the eternal ownership of England of the small portion of land where his body is buried.
The poem appears to not follow the normal purpose of a Petrarchan/Italian sonnet either.

The reason is a memorial service honoring the British seamen buried in a piece of land deeded by the U S government to Britain on the island of Ocracoke in the Outer Banks. It's a story of heroism and gratitude that is little known outside of the tiny town. It begins in May of 1942, shortly after the attack on Pearl Harbor.
